Award-winning Author

Argyro Graphy turned a life-changing trauma into a children's book series that inspires kids everywhere to celebrate their abilities.

A proud Canadian and the mastermind behind the Bentley Hippo Book Series, Award-winning author Argyro Graphy, is acclaimed globally for her thought-provoking books for children. The author remains at the forefront to promote the worth of positive aptitudes among children of all ages, all while instilling the love for reading.

"Teaching kids the significance of inclusivity and diversity right from the start can make them caring individuals towards others. With the Inspiring Children Series, Bentley promotes humbleness among children with an aim to make it second nature, from a young age," says Graphy.

"It took losing my sight to see my vision"

Graphy is no stranger to obstacles, traumas and tragedies. A life-altering trauma recently robbed her of complete vision in one eye. Having to deal with the devastation of the overnight trauma, she now faced more criticism, heard whispers and is now labeled. It is for this reason that she shifted the direction of her books and author journey. It was time to see the person first, and not their disability. It's time that we embrace our differences and stand proud of who we are just as we are. Graphy stands apart of other self-published authors in that she made the bold move of giving all five of her characters a challenge/disability. Her hope is to 'normalize' them in the eyes of children so that they judge less and accept more.

The author's passion for reading and her flair for writing breathes life into Bentley, creating phenomenal tales designed on the principles of ethical teachings. Each story focuses on engraving the worth of positive values, on the tender hearts of children. With a diverse group of characters facing their own struggles her goal is to teach children that despite challenges, we are all valuable we all matter and we must all accept and respect each other

"My disability does not define who I am"

Q & A Interview

What challenges were you faced with growing up? and how did that impact your life?

It's tough trying to feel worthy and important, once you've been bullied and remained silent. Growing up, every so often thoughts of being inferior and not important, always entered my mind. These memories would sneak up on me, and send me into a downward spiral, even today as an adult.

Who inspired you to create Bentley?

I doodled every day. Without realizing it, I kept creating an image and with each doodle I found myself building on that character. In my head he was a hippo, on paper though, he looked like a cow. Each time I looked at him I smiled. I named my character Bentley and thought that if he could make me smile, then he could have that same impact on children

You mentioned a life-altering trauma, can you elaborate?

I underwent a routine eye procedure that went bad overnight. I went to sleep perfectly fine and woke up blind. I am now 100% legally blind in one eye, which brings about new daily struggles and challenges.

What are your future plans and goals for Bentley?

My plans and goals for Bentley change every day. As he gains popularity, my vision expands and even I am surprised at how far I have come with him and where we are going. I am working on building Bentley as a total brand and the opportunities are unlimited.

If there is one thing that you could tell a child, what would it be and why?

I would encourage children to speak up, to believe in themselves, never doubt their worth, be kind not only to others, but to themselves, and be proud of who they are - just as they are.
